

The FCC has a responsibility to the citizens of this country to protect the rights of ALL who wish to develop or consume content from ALL broadcast media. It does not have the right to provide the rich corporate monopolies who already own too much of the information substructure of this country, with additional ownership privileges. To pass such an act like this would be rebuke our rights to freedom of the press and privacy.

I just returned from a visit to Kenya which lasted three years. When I arrived in Kenya they had only one radio and tv station, owned by the government. The content had nothing more interesting to offer than what the president had for breakfast. The newly elected government of Kenya has given the right to information access back to the people. Broadcast media are now reporting the real news of Kenya.

The new Kenya is using the United States as a model. It now looks like the United States is using the old Kenya as a model.

Stop this now.
